Senior Army leaders from Fort Bragg, N.C., spoke with the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce Military Affairs Council June 24 during a virtual "command performance" that updated business officials and civic leaders on recent events and key topics affecting Army readiness, Soldiers' training, Fort Bragg services and Army recruiting.

The community event included opening remarks from the Fayetteville, N.C. Mayor, Mitch Colvin, and provided an opportunity for organizations from across Fort Bragg to provide updates and answer questions from leaders in the Fayetteville community.

Participants included Maj. Gen. Eugene LeBeouf, U.S. Army Forces Command Chief of Staff; Maj. Gen. James Craft, XVIII Airborne Corps Deputy Commanding General; Richard Holcomb, U.S. Army Special Operations Command Deputy to the Commanding General; and Justin Mitchell, Acting Fort Bragg Garrison Commander.

As the FORSCOM representative, LeBeouf spoke to the audience about the Army command's mission to train and prepare combat ready, globally responsive forces to build and sustain readiness and meet combatant command requirements. He updated the online audience with details about how that has continued despite needed COVID-19 health precautions.

One of the goals of the Chamber of Commerce's MAC is to partner and connect the military community with the local community to enhance an already strong regional relationship.

During the event, Fort Bragg leaders were asked to share ways that the MAC and local community could better support the installation.
